The request to delay further is denied. Though Mr. Guldi suffers from chronic conditions, there is no evidence that these conditions cannot be treated by the Bureau of Prisons. Mr. Guldi's time to report has been delayed several times already, and no further delay will be given at this time.

Re: United States v. George Guldi
19 Cr. 126 (AKH)

Dear Judge Hellerstein:

The defense writes to request that the Court delay Mr. Guldi's surrender date to May 7, 2024, the same date as his co-defendant Victoria Davidson. Mr. Guldi seeks a delay of his surrender in order to complete a series of medical appointments and procedures to treat his many serious health conditions.

Mr. Guldi is currently under the care of medical teams specializing in [REDACTED].¹ Mr. Guldi and his team of doctors are working on a treatment plan in preparation for Mr. Guldi's period of incarceration. Mr. Guldi is being actively monitored for, among other things, [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] has resulted in rapid deterioration of his [REDACTED] necessitating further intervention by a [REDACTED]. Mr. Guldi's active medical conditions are severe and require approximately ten prescription medications to manage.

An extension of the surrender date until May 7, 2024 will allow Mr. Guldi to meet with his specialists to obtain necessary treatment before his incarceration, and ¹ Further details about Mr. Guldi's medical history and prescribed medications are available in the Pre-Sentence Report, in the defense filing at ECF # 207, and in the letter from Mr. Guldi's primary care physician, attached as Exhibit A.
